U.S. Department of Labor Honors Program

The U.S. Department of Labor is seeking applicants for its Honors Program, a two-year program for full-time, entry-level attorneys who will have graduated from law school in 2018. They are hiring up to nine positions, with six at the national office in Washington, DC and three at regional offices (Kansas City, Boston, and Dallas). The attorneys will be part of the Office of the Solicitor, the agency that represents the Secretary of Labor in court and before administrative adjudicatory boards and commissions. National office Honors Attorneys work with various subject-area divisions, performing litigation, regulatory writing and review, client advice, appellate advocacy, and administrative action work. Regional Honors Attorneys primarily handle litigation—bringing cases to enforce things such as Fair Labor Standards Act, workplace safety laws, federal workers' compensation laws, and anti-discrimination obligations in federal contracts. After two years, Honors Attorneys receive a permanent placement in a regional office or national office division of the Office of the Solicitor.

The application deadline is October 6, 2017.
